"I have said that we will be guided by science in the way we react to the investigation of impacts on water outside of Pavillion. The collaborative effort used to gather this data allowed Wyoming experts to have a say about sampling methodology and testing procedures. I feel that the process used to acquire this data was an improvement on the process used to inform the draft EPA report last December.

"I thank our partners for working together with Wyoming. We are now waiting as analysis of this data is done. It should help inform the peer review process."
